THE SCIENCE OF THE SACRED WORD

BEING A SUMMARISED TRANSLATION

OF

THE PRANAVA-VADA

OF

GARGYAYANA

BY

BHAGAVAN DAS, M.A.

with notes by Annie Besant

VOL. II.

THE THEOSOPHIST OFFICE, Adyar, Madras, S., India.

1911
CONTENTS

SECTION III.—Kriya—ACTION:—

CHAPTER X.—THE UPA-NISHATS.

The Upanishats.—Their relation to the other parts of scripture.—Their contents; the description of the forms and functions of the atoms of the various root-elements.
—The number of the Upanishats.—The contents of those of the Rk.—The subdivisions of the root-elements.—Indication of the contents of the other Upanishats.—The meaning of the word.—The special power of mantras.—Why.—The dual nature of the World-process, growth and decay.—Evolution as a whole.—Minor Upanishats.

CHAPTER XI.—THE UPA-VEDAS:—

The Upani-vedas.—The combinations of atoms.—Their subservience to Karma.—The evolution of the various Kingdoms, mineral, vegetable, etc.

CHAPTER XII.—THE SHAKAS OF THE VEDAS:—

The Shākās, 'branches,' or appendices of the Vedas.—The Krṣṇa and Shākā, or 'black' and 'white,' subdivisions of Scripture.—The Shākās as links between them. Light-atoms and dark-atoms.—The number of Shākās of each Veda.—The Yantra-shāstras.—The completion of Scripture proper.
CHAPTER XIII.—THE UPĀDHYAYAS.

The Āgamas or ‘limbs’ of the Vedas.—Their proper order in nature and for study.

CHAPTER XIV.—RULES OF STUDY.

Pedagogy.—Work and waste of time; work-days and holidays.—Why.—Correspondence with cognition, etc.—Triples.—Adjustment of lunar dates.—The importance of sound.—The three congenital duties of man.—Ways of repayment.—That to the Rishi discharged by study and teaching.—Order in which the various scriptures and the subsidiary sciences should be studied.—Two principal methods of study, from above below, and from below upwards.—The one more easy and natural for young jivas.—Why.

CHAPTER XV.—THE SIX UPĀDHYAYAS OR DARSHANAS :

The Upādhyayas.—Their nature and relation to the Āgamas and the Vedas.—Their names.—Their purpose.

APPENDIX TO CHAPTER XV.

Interpretation of the Vedas.

CHAPTER XVI.—STUDIES AND SCIENCES.

The psychological state of ‘freedom’, gained by the study of the Upādhyayas.—The order in which they should be studied.—The Purusa-Vidya and their correspondences with the Trinity.—Their authors.—The characteristic distinction between the Āgamas and the Upādhyayas.—The purpose of all this study.—Derivative sciences.—Their principal groups.—The classes of students to whom they are addressed and their subject matter.—The two main classes of authors.—The two kinds or degrees of understanding.—The metaphysical why of mutual help and instruction.

CHAPTER XVII.—THE SŪTRA-MĀ.-THERAPLOYD.

The metaphysical explanation of mutual help.—The common Sūtra-mā.—The One through the many.—Individualities within individualities.—The pragmatic bearing of these metaphysical considerations.—Endless progress.—Various illustrations of the idea of Sūtra-mā.—Triples of aspects.—Questions as to justification of effort and possibility of avoiding joy and sorrow.—Replies.—The three functions of the Sūtra-mā.—Its distinction from the Paramātma.—Its identity with the Jīvātman.

CHAPTER XVIII.—THE PENULTIMATES:

Pratyākshāna.—Its characteristics.—Madhyamakā.—Its distinguishing feature.—The explanation of its presence.—The meaning of illusion.—Jīvātman.—Its definition.—The Nexus, Relation, of Nishedha or Negation, between Self and Non-Self.—Its functions.—Subjunctive, causal energy.—Its nature and aspects.—Distinctions of aspects of the Self and the other Penultimates.

CHAPTER XIX.—THE JIVĀTMA.

The Jīvātman a compound of I and Not-I.—Etymological significance.—Its main characteristics.—Atomical and continuity.—Embodiment of oppositions and contradictions.—Its psychological stages: non-conscious, conscious, omniscience.—Its grades, one within another, endlessly.—Progress and regress, evolution, etc., the
CHAPTER XXI.—THE MAIN PSYCHOLOGICAL FEATURES OF THE JIVĀTMA:

The reason why the Legon in terms of sound is so important for us.—The derivation therefrom of the three main constituents of the Jivātma.—Cognition, desire and action.—The world-facts derived from these.—The order of succession of the three.—Their dual form, causal and effectual.—Special considerations as to desire.—Dual form of work, particular and universal.—Metaphysical negations.

CHAPTER XXII.—FURTHER CONSIDERATIONS AS TO KRIYĀ:

The supreme importance of Kriyā.—Philological considerations and illustrations.—Opposite doctrines; (a) all words are derivative and of gradual growth and evolution; (b) all are radical and fortuitous.—Reconciliation by difference of standpoint.—Triplets involved by Kriyā.—Space-time-motion as objective conditions of it.—Definitions of space, time, and of energy (in place of motion).—Their relations, as locus standi, one to another.—The subjective conditions of Kriyā.—Karta or actor.—Kārya, act or work.—Kārāya or Karuṣha? Cause or instrumental cause, instrument.—Prayojana, 'engaging' motive.—Explanation of free-will or self-dependence.—Metaphysical considerations of the interdependence of all.—Correspondences.

CHAPTER XXIII.—THE COMPARISONS OF KRIYĀ:

The metaphysical nature of action.—The meaning of action.—Its manifest result, the triplet of birth-stay-death.—The definition of each.—The quartet of factors involved in each of the three.—No finity of anything anywhere and ever.—The five main kinds of action.—Three principles.—Illustration from day and night.—Endless variations of ways of action and evolution.—Supremacy of Self over all, great and little, success and failure.—Action as the result of desire and necessity.—The growth of joys and sorrows, friendships and hostilities, out of such necessities, and consequent emotional investment of the acts of going and coming, birth and death as well as ill.—The unity of all in ignorance.—Further considerations as to Prakriti.—Its sub-divisions.—The sub-divisions of Kuchchana.—Health and disease.—Avoidance of excess.—Metaphysical transcendence of all movements by the Self.

CHAPTER XXIV.—The Principal Forms of Kriyā:
The four sub-divisions of Kriyā.—Similar sub-divisions of cognition and desire.—(i) Kriyā, its nature and significance.—(ii) Prāṇāyāma.—(iii) Viśēṣāyā.—(iv) Upākṣāyā.—The synthesis of the four in an endless chain of cause and effect.—The mutual relation of motionlessness and incessant movement, as that of substance and attribute.—Manifestations of Kriyā as human Karma and arts.

CHAPTER XXV.—The Metaphysics of Kriyā in Practice. Existence and Non-existence:
Resumé.—Distinction between Kriyā and Karma.—Karma, the manifestation of the strongest desire.—Strongest desire makes character, svabhāva, for the time.—Svabhāva, not a pure unity, but a unity in diversity, in the individual as well as the Universal.—Metaphysical considerations.—Their application to practice.—Vāyū, mutual commerce, the embodiment of the constant endeavor of the one to encompass the all.—Knowledge and speech as action and reaction.—The science of Brahman, the final and all-comprehensive ‘commerce.’—Even the unbeliever unconsciously believes in the Thread of Continuity, of unity in diversity, the Universal Self or Consciousness.—Metaphysical reconciliation of change and changelessness, motion in motionlessness, action out of the motionless.—Existence and non-existence, plenum and vacuum, ever and never, inseparable in the Absolute.—Nature of the illusion of succession, growth and decay.—Growth and activity of Mahā-Viṣṇu.—The meaning of omniscience.—The destined progress of all Jivas to the status of Mahā-Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER XXVI.—Light and Shade:
The World-process in terms of Light and Darkness as corresponding to existence and non-existence.—Darkness, the sheath of Light.—The triplet of luminous, luminous, illuminated.—Light and shade as Daivijñāna and Mūlapraṇāna.—Also as aparāśā and parāśā. —Their condition in pralaya, etc.—The Science and Art of picturing.—Three Kinds thereof.—Painting; photography; prediction. —Sub-divisions. —The psychology of memory as a picture-process.—Clairvoyance, etc.—Application to the Science and Art of Medicine.—Three grades of physicians.—Application to other sciences and arts.—Correspondence of the three kinds of ‘picturing’ with A, U, and M. —Metaphysical significance of ‘decoration’.