I have experienced death in several different ways. As a former Health care worker, I had to deal with death several times. It is always hard.

16:27:01 From Greg to Everyone:

There is always the grief, and the loss associated with my patients, to the point that I had to stop this work in recent years. Because I get attached to these patients,

16:29:50 From Aurea Cabral to Everyone:

I dealt with death, including as a health professional, but recently and even this month, it helps in the transition of loved ones, the difference is that now I do it from a very peaceful place. 🙏

Tuija, in response to your question does our connection weaken over time? In my experience, no it does not. Our connection and communication across the veil does not weaken over time. It is always governed by the importance of the message and the need to communicate, with no regard for time or space. 🙏

17:49:22 From Rose Bates to Everyone:

The time shortly after someone passes it is easier to feel their vibration and connection not so much because they are closer to the earth plane which they are, but more because we have been lifted up to their plane. As we return to mundane affairs our attunement to that vibration can wane. As we practice to elevate our consciousness to that level the connection is again sensed in mind and emotion. For me with my dad when I meditate on the joy I felt during his transition it reconnects me.

17:49:59 From Claire Beynon to Everyone:

A simple, but for me, potent observation that's come through this ongoing vigil for Ukraine, as well as through these 49 days of puja and remembrance for Michael, lovingly honouring him in his leaving: our human family is a whole of many parts. One body. As we personally honour our dearly Beloveds in their passing, so we honour all those have died - and who are dying - at the hands of violence in conflict-ridden relationships and war-torn regions of the world. In creating ceremony for those we love and have 'lost', so we love those who have died in unspeakable circumstances, without ceremony. Through the personal, we contact the universal. By naming and honouring our loved ones when they leave this plane, we name and acknowledge this we do not know... Blessings and gratitude to dear Michael, and to you, Tuija, for the deep privilege of sharing this space and journey with you.
